Times are tough right now. That’s why if you’re fortunate enough to secure a job interview you need to make sure that you’re perfect.

Besides having a stellar resume and doing some research on your perspective employer, you need to have the right look.

Before we go much further, different jobs have different dress codes. A career in finance, for example, will call for more of a power suit, while a creative job, such as in media, allows you some more freedom. If you’re unsure about the dress code it’s perfectly acceptable to call and ask. It’s not a sign of weakness, but one of respect. If you’re in doubt, always stay on the conservative side. It’s better to be overdressed than under-dressed.

While being properly groomed and wearing a suit seems like common sense, sometimes you just forget the small stuff. So, to help you land a job, here are 5 significant tips on how to dress for a job interview.Make sure that you’ve trimmed your fingernails, you’re clean shaven and that you have a traditional haircut.

This haircut includes a classic taper or basic business man’s haircut, meaning short on the sides and back, but long enough for some versatility when not interviewing. You should get a haircut several days before the interview so that your hair can settle, or, allows you time to get another haircut if you’re not satisfied. Remember, make sure your hair is clean and avoid trendy and wet looks.

Your hair will grow back, so it’s best to bite the bullet and have a haircut that is appealing to the interviewer.
