Getting a job is harder than you think these days due to the low economy and also with the competition of new grads and people who are unemployed. These are exactly the reasons why it is important to grow thick skin when you are approached by employers or even socializing with others. To stand out and become noticed by those that will hire you, it is crucial to be different and say something that will astonish them in a positive way. This is by asking the appropriate questions or provide suggestions that will help them improve their company.
