Like your resume, you should update your reference list more frequently than only when you are actively looking for a job. The last thing you want is a reference to make this face and act confused when a potential employer calls them. The killer combination is to have references that 1) can vouch for how talented and capable you are in work setting, 2) feel like they are important to you beyond being on your reference list. It's not very tough to maintain this level of enthusiasm from your reference list if you follow these tips for maintaining your relationships.
